Il titolo di registrazione è quello tratto dal primo album dei Beatles e George Martin di comporre gli arrangiamenti offrì, inoltre, la possibilità di ripartire eventuali errori nelle sovraincisioni vocali e strumentali grazie al "takeoff in". Questo termine tecnico descrive un processo secondo il quale una registrazione viene risonata in studio, per catturarne in modo nitido eventuali errori presenti in una sovraincisione: in questo modo i musicisti "la cantano" (traduzione di "takeoff in") in tracce predefinite per poi "ripetere" (non ripeto il lavoro) il brano ripreso. Questa funzione consentì inoltre di registrare voci e strumenti sulla stessa traccia in posti diversi, a condizione che questi non si sovrappongano.

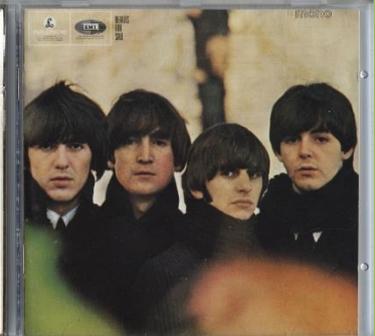

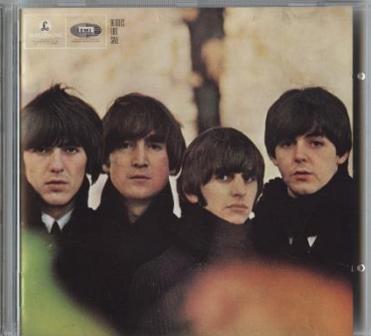

La traccia che dà il titolo all'album fu registrata in tre ore durante la mattinata del 16 aprile 1964 ed è un buon esempio di come le quattro tracce a disposizione siano state utilizzate in modo efficiente e creativo. La notevole tecnica di batteria, basso e chitarra fu collocata sulla prima pista, mentre le voci di John e Paul vennero registrate contemporaneamente nelle seconde. Ricordo: Dopo quattro false partenze a cinque registrazioni complete, venne scelta la nona versione come base su cui furono poi registrate le sovraincisioni utilizzando le due tracce rimaste. Songhi, carpanzoni, chitarra acustica a doppia pista.

registrate sul numero tre. L'intero processo venne poi ripetuto effettuando un doppio tracking delle voci sull'ultima traccia libera.

A quel punto non c'era più spazio sulla Bobina e George doveva ancora aggiungere un'ultima parte di chitarra alla canzone. Per creare una traccia aggiuntiva, il mixer e il tecnico suono vennero allora costretti a un nuovo master e il supporto strumentale trasferito sulla traccia uno e due. Le voci delle prime tre e quattro furono infine rimescolate e registrate sulla terza traccia della bobina - basandosi la quarta libreria per la sovraincisione della chitarra. Anche se "Help!" fu l'unica canzone dell'album a richiedere questo tipo di lavorazione, il "trimestro" delle tracce diventò sempre più frequente fino a quando, nell'estate del 1966, le bobine a otto piste vennero messe ufficialmente a disposizione del gruppo.

Loibam Help! fu pubblicato in un momento in cui i dischi stereo venivano venduti a un piccolo numero di appassionati di hi-fi, pertanto il messaggio su mono aveva la priorità sulla versione stereo. Nel 1990 in occasione del debutto su CD di Help! George Martin decise di realizzare un nuovo mix stereo dei nastri a quattro tracce: il team che si è occupato della rimasterizzazione, ha utilizzato questa versione.

La rimasterizzazione di questo album Help! risulta dai master degli album originali prodotti dai mix di George Martin realizzati per il CD nel 1986.

sfidando tutti i limiti della bobina singola: batteria, bassi e chitarra furono indirizzati alla prima traccia; i suoni del loop su nastro alla seconda; una doppia traccia vocale, tamburello, organo e backbeats guitar alla terza; mentre nella quarta vennero introdotti voce principale e un sitar. L'evoluzione della registrazione fu resa ancora più complessa dal fatto che i loop sulla seconda traccia erano stati registrati poco in varie sedi degli studi di Abbey Road. Questi effetti erano collegati a diversi canali sul banco di mixaggio e furono poi introdotti con effetto feedback a feedback durante tutta la canzone.

Per molti brani di Revolver si usò l'ADT (Artificially Automated Double Tracking): una nuova tecnica di registrazione inventata dal tecnico Ken Townsend per riprodurre artificialmente il suono della doppia traccia. Grazie all'ADT è possibile di duplicare una voce o uno strumento dal nastro master su una seconda bobina e, allo stesso tempo, mandare di una frazione di secondo rispetto all'originale. Questo produce l'illusione di due voci o strumenti distinti provenienti da una singola registrazione. L'ADT permise ai Beatles di risparmiare molto tempo

Revolver fu il primo LP dei Beatles a essere registrato dai fonici Geoff Emerick, Emerick aveva lavorato all'epoca a escludere pienamente all'ascolto sperimentale che caratterizzò le sessioni. Completato il 22 giugno 1966, l'album richiese un totale di 300 ore di lavoro tra registrazione e mixaggio: un'impresa senza precedenti.

La rimasterizzazione di questo album è stata curata dal master analogico stereo originale.

Si ovvia al problema intervenendo direttamente sul nastro master nel momento esatto in cui compariva la registrazione, modificandola fino a trasformarla in un fazzoletto di carta. L'ADT (Automatic Double Tracking) l'effetto prosegue fino quasi alla fine del brano, quando torna in mano con uno spostamento sinistra-destra.

Nel 1967 capiterà a volte che i Beatles non potessero usare Abbey Road a causa di un preavviso troppo breve e che finissero con il trapianto in studi indipendenti a Londra. Nonostante le visite agli studi Olympic, De Lane Lea e Chappell, tuttavia, la maggior parte del loro lavoro continuò a svolgersi tra in studio due e lo studio tre di Abbey Road.

La discesa in campo di questo album è stato creato dal nome "Magical Mystery Tour".

"Hey Bulldog" fu invece registrata, sovranizzata e mixata in un'unica sessione di dieci ore utilizzando un solo registratore a quattro piste. La traccia uno conteneva batteria, piano, chitarra e tamburello, la numero due il basso, chitarra e batteria in levare con riverbero sulla tre c'erano una doppia traccia di voci e la chitarra solista, mentre la traccia finale includeva la voce principale di John con l'accompagnamento vocale di Paul e un'altra chitarra solista.

Realizzata durante le sessioni per Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band, "Only A Northern Song" era stata registrata con un procedimento speciale. I tecnici del suono di Abbey Road scopero un sistema per controllare la velocità di due registratori a quattro piste in modo da renderli perfettamente sincroni, il che consentiva di disporre di otto tracce simultaneamente senza bisogno di "timbrata". Il primo nastro conteneva quindi il basso, tromba con glockenspiel, batteria e organo, mentre il secondo aveva gli effetti, piano, voce e una doppia traccia di voci.

I problemi sorsero però nel mixaggio, quando bisogna fare vari tentativi per far partire i due registratori nello stesso istante prendendo i tasti "play". Si procedeva talmente a rilento e in maniera casuale che fu realizzato solo un mix mono e si dovette creare una "finta" versione stereo per il nuovo album. Questa prassi che all'epoca era molto utilizzata, cadde in disuso e di conseguenza in questo CD la canzone è riportata in mono.

Paradossalmente, il mix originale di "Only A Northern Song" non fu mai utilizzato perché l'LP in mono fu realizzato in fase di montaggio usando semplicemente il canale destro e il canale sinistro del master in stereo. Di conseguenza, questa versione mono non è mai stata pubblicata ed è possibile ascoltarla per la prima volta in questo momento.

La digitalizzazione di questo album è stata creata dal master analogico stereo originale, con l'eccezione della traccia 7 che è stata riveduta ed è stata ristampata come originale.

Ai brani tratti dalla sessione della Apple vennero aggiunte due canzoni registrate a Abbey Road, risalente al febbraio del 1968, "Across the Universe" è recentemente apparsa su un album di beneficenza per il World Wildlife Fund dal titolo No One's Gonna Change Our World. Rallentando il nastro a quattro tracce e aggiungendo archette e coro, Phil Spector ha creato una versione molto diversa dalla precedente. La registrazione finale dei Beatles del gennaio 1970 di "I Me Mine", fu allungata e rimasta l'ultimo giorno di lavorazione, il 2 aprile 1970. Come per il precedente album Abbey Road, anche in questo caso non è stato considerato necessario creare il mix mono di "Let It Be".
